Best apps for smart watches: new and old Watches have become a big part of our lives now, and one of the top reasons for that is because our mobile devices have added the ability to tell the time and give us a variety of notifications while on the go. Considering these factors, it makes sense that wearables are taking over the smart watch market at a rapid pace. The Samsung Gear S3, launched a little over a month ago, shows the rapid advancement in the market. But what about the current models? Which are the best smart watches to buy right now? This can be tricky, given that the market is still very new, but we will try to help you decide. Google Pixel Watch: Quite simply, the Google Pixel Watch is the best smart watch for Android users. For starters, it has a notification LED of sorts, which makes it easier to glance at it without looking at your phone. Also, unlike most other smart watches, it is resistant to water and scratch resistant, so it is a solid choice for people who frequently suffer from both. Apple Watch Series 2: Despite being released recently, the Apple Watch Series 2 is far and away the best smart watch for Apple users. The first edition of the watch came with such features as swimming mode, fitness monitoring, and the ability to map a run. The second version has even more capabilities, offering much more than the first edition had. And while both editions allow you to take and make calls, the second edition's release allows for a pay-as-you-go plan. That means you can ring other Apple devices that are near you, as well as make other mobile payments. Samsung Gear S3: The last smart watch on the list is the Samsung Gear S3, which aims to make the wearables market a little better. It has a number of features that other smart watches don't have, and the one that stands out the most is its fitness tracker. It can track your heart rate and watch for signs of inactivity, so you can get right back on the road if you need to. It is one of the few smart watches that is also built with the Google Android system. Overall, the smart watches listed here will serve you well, whichever ones you choose. They have their drawbacks, but are also their strengths. It is just a matter of deciding which of the ones listed above suits you best.This post comes to you courtesy of Dr.

Q: Extracting a certain group of items from a string I have a string (or words) that I need to extract a group of items from. The string looks like this: "This is an item group : Table, Chair, seat, flat, desk, lamp" From this string I need to extract only these items so I can make a list: {Table, Chair, seat, flat, desk, lamp} The only idea that I have is to split by spaces and then using a list comprehension to check every item in the list. A: You can use str.split(), then a list comprehension (extract items from the list): >>> 'This is an item group : Table, Chair, seat, flat, desk, lamp'.split() ['This is an item group ','Table, Chair, seat, flat, desk, lamp'] a = ['Table', 'Chair','seat', 'flat', 'desk', 'lamp'] b = [' '.join(x) for x in a] print(b) ['Table', 'Chair','seat', 'flat', 'desk', 'lamp'] Or take a look here. 9, 11 and 12 were not observed. However, the In vitro proliferative response observed in the absence of TCR stimulation or by stimulating the WT and S85-87A OT-I TCRs with the H-2D^b^ restricted OVA~257--264~ peptide, regardless the presence or absence of H-2D^b^, confirms that S85-87 and other residues in the TCR CDR2α chain contribute to stabilize the CDR1α loop (Figure 1{ref-type="fig"} and Figure 5{ref-type="fig"}A, lower panel). The results of Figure 5{ref-type="fig"}A also show that this stably looped CDR1α is produced in the absence of TCR stimulation and without expression of TCR β chain. It is possible to hypothesize that the S85-87 residue of the CDR1α loop forms a protein-protein interaction with the TCR β chain in the absence of stimulation. This hypothesis is supported by previous studies showing that CDR1α and CDR
